New York should review its energy plan

by Dennis Higgins
Oneonta

Last year the Climate Action Council completed a scoping plan intended to achieve decarbonization goals in the Climate Leadership and Community Protection Act. Projections to meet these goals from New York's energy research and development authority (NYSERDA) are for 50 gigawatts of solar, 10 gigawatts of on-shore wind, almost 20 gigawatts of off-shore wind, a huge battery system, lots of new transmission lines, and dispatchable backup power.

A gigawatt of power (GW) is a thousand megawatts (MW). At 100 percent production, a 1 MW facility can power 1,000 homes. But solar and wind do not produce at 100 percent, or even 25 percent. Last year, New York state's solar rivaled Alaska's at about 12 percent capacity factor: the state's proposed 50 GW of solar would generate on average 6 GW. Onshore wind in the state last year had a 22 percent capacity factor. The proposed 10 GW would generate an average of 2.2 GW. Of course, any production would not necessarily come when needed, and there are no season-to-season battery solutions for this amount of energy in existence.

Still, the solar and wind facilities will require about a million acres of upstate farmland and forest. To make this part of the plan happen, the state enacted accelerated siting (94-C) for these projects. The state bar association publication writes:

[T]he burden of hosting renewables facilities, especially solar farms, will not be distributed evenly ... [but] concentrated in those areas where it is easiest and least expensive for energy companies to build. ... [D]evelopers will choose sites where population density and land prices are low, the ground is level, the soil contains no rocks or roots, and transmission lines are close ... These also happen to be the very places where New York's prime

Take advantage of continuing ed courses, programs

by Dan Marrone
Farmingdale

Organizations devoted to the well-being of retirees—many of whom are senior citizens—universally encourage taking advantage of continuing education opportunities. SUNY has long offered tuition waivers for New York state residents 60 and older, who audit credit-bearing classes at any of the state's public colleges and universities.

Many other opportunities exist for retirees to take advantage of “lifelong learning continuing education programs” at various SUNY campuses.

The key questions are “Why bother taking noncredit, lifelong learning courses? In general, why should retirees participate in continuing education?” The common reason for retirees to pursue continual education is intellectual enhancement that usually boils down to the following rationale: “Continuing lifelong learning into your retirement years improves mental well-being, strengthens physical health, and helps you forge new social connections.” The last element, “social connections,” is immensely important because a serious vacuum occurs when one retires.

Furthermore, many retirees experience isolation and loneliness especially when children “fly away” leaving empty nests. This also occurs with the tragic loss of a lifetime soulmate.

Letter to the editor

With sincere thanks

To the editor:

I am writing to sincerely thank Brenda Seckerson for her recent article "Fighting for full pension benefits" published in the Summer 2023 edition of The Active Retiree. In this article, she discussed the difficulties in receiving her full pension from NYSLRS, which included unused sick leave. She had worked for 14 years for the University at Albany and retired two-and-one-half years ago. I too retired from the UAlbany two years ago after 15 years teaching.

Before reading the article, I was unaware of the fact that the pension benefit calculation was to include unused sick leave, which adds to the overall time served. As Brenda suggested, I contacted NYSLRS and was told that the recalculation was in the works, but there was no estimated time for completion. As such, as she also suggested, I wrote a letter to the State Comptroller's Office (Thomas DiNapoli) requesting that this issue be addressed promptly. Within two weeks, I received a direct call from NYSLRS indicating that the recalculation was complete. Several days later, I received a letter that showed my updated pension amount and updated years served, plus the amount I would be receiving in back payment that would be added to my next pension check.

I also suggest that recent retirees contact NYSLRS to see if their pensions include the unused sick leave. If they do not and a timeframe is not provided for the recalculation, they should also contact the State Comptroller's Office to request that this issue be addressed in a timely manner.

7,000+ retirees strong

As we move into 2024, I would like to thank you for continuing membership as a retiree—as one of the more than 7,000 UUP retirees.

Leaders gather

Your UUP retiree leaders—the eight regional representatives of the Retired Membership Governing Committee and the 32 chapter officers for retirees—met this fall for regional training and obtained the updated UUP Retiree Leadership handbook to help in their areas. The leaders are working on spring regional/campus retiree events, replene with good speakers and food! Look for those announcements in the New Year.

NYSUT RC 43 to meet in Florida

This year we will be part of the NYSUT Florida Retiree Council 43's regional conference, scheduled for Monday, May 20, 2024, from 8:30 a.m. to 3 p.m. at The Florida Hotel, 1500 Sand Lake Road, Orlando, FL 32809. The cost for the full-day event with breakfast, lunch and many programs is $40 for any UUP retiree member in or visiting Florida.

UUP retirees are members of NYSUT Retiree Councils 40, 41 and 42, but can be a part of this NYSUT statewide Florida retiree group too. To get more information on NYSUT RC 43 (it has 13 regional area in that state) and/or for an invitation to the 2024 event, email Miriam Hanan, NYSUT retiree services consultant for RC 43, at miriamtrh@gmail.com or call her at (516) 236-0276. Please mention you are a current UUP retiree, living or visiting Florida and would like to be on their email list for this and other regional events. We hope to see you in Orlando! (Note: Council 43 holds these meetings in different Florida regions each year.)

Membership cards mailed

This fall, you should have received a two-sided color letter from UUP President Fred Kowal with your 2024 UUP/NYSUT membership tear-off card, plus a list of the many UUP and NYSUT retiree benefits. It includes your union membership ID number, which will assist you in obtaining benefits and discounts.

If you did not receive that USPS mailing, call UUP at (800) 342-4206 and ask to have a UUP membership card mailed to you.

Brood award nominations sought

We hope you know and would like to nominate a worthy UUP retiree for the 2024 Pearl H. Brod Outstanding Retiree Award.

Nominees can be any active UUP retiree who has provided exemplary service to UUP and to SUNY, and/or has rendered outstanding volunteer service to their community after retirement. The late Pearl H. Brod of Farmingdale was a long-time academic delegate who served as elected chair of the statewide Committee on Active Retired Membership (the name was changed to the Retired Membership Governing Committee in recent years) from 1999-2003; she served as COARM's Long Island Region representative from 1993-2009. The award was first given out in 1998, and was renamed in her honor in 2011. More information and a nomination form can be downloaded at <https://uupinfo.org/awards/pdf/PearlBrodApp.pdf> UUP proudly awarded this honor in 2023 to Daniel Marrone of Farmingdale and David Ritchie of Cortland. Congratulations to these great UUP retirees as they continue their work for all of us. The RMGC looks forward to your submission. The RMGC will forward its selections to the UUP statewide Executive Board for consideration. Award(s) will be handed out at the union's 2024 Fall Delegate Assembly. Stay safe and healthy this exciting new year, with the hope that we can see you at one or all of UUP and/or NYSUT events.

Safeguarding retirement security

On Oct. 17, the Alliance for Retired Americans held an annual daylong meeting, “Preparing for Retirement Symposium: Individual and Collective Efforts.” The event brought together government officials, labor movement leaders, policy experts, Social Security and pension advocates, academics, attorneys and economists to discuss retirement security and social insurance issues. AFT and ARA members who attended the in-person and virtual event learned about ways for individuals and the government to take action that ensures retirement security for all.

Fight for SS benefits gains momentum

A bipartisan plan aimed at securing retirement benefits for public employees has been quietly gathering steam in Congress, representing a substantial boost to address a long-standing wrong. The Social Security Fairness Act, championed by Reps. Abigail Spanberger (D-Va.) and Garret Graves (R-La.), targets the repeal of two provisions, the Windfall Elimination Provision and the Government Pension Offset, embedded in the Social Security Act. These provisions have long been criticized for unfairly reducing or altogether eliminating Social Security benefits for people who have devoted much of their careers to serving the public. Left, AFT President Randi Weingarten promises to work tirelessly for retiree issues.

(GOER) and will be training Gretchen Sarnowicz; Dan Quackenbush and Jo-Marie Ethier to take over retirement benefits. The RMGC thanks Apple for his years of excellent service to retirees.

Regional Reports and 2023-24 Funding Requests

- L. Tyler moved and Russell seconded the motion to approve funding for fall/spring campus/regional retiree meetings. Passed.

- L. Tyler moved and Moore seconded the motion to approve funding for regional reps to hold planning meetings with their campus officer for retirees. Passed.

- L. Tyler moved and Russell seconded that Lyon's expenses be paid to be an observer in the event the RMGC chair is unable to attend a UUP Executive Board meeting. The vice chair will not carry the limited Executive Board voting powers as an observer. Passed.

- All regional reps reported on their meetings fall 2023 and plans for the spring.

Old Business

- OfR retreats were held on Long Island, Albany and Rochester this fall. NYSUT Organizing grants ($3,000) defrayed some expenses. Well received.

- Update on third-party UUP dues notification procedure. This will protect our members from losing benefits due to lack of payment. Suggested this could be added to the Retiree Membership form.

- Our members are entitled to $1,000 life insurance from UUP, and a $3,000 payment from Civil Service, but we need to know when a death occurs.

- Update on UUP VOTE-COPE—the ORP auto-deduct option. Complicated process, may look to start with TIAA ORP first. Benefits is still working on the process.

- Update on any UUP policy on committee chairs/co-chairs in regard to retiree participation. Technically, there is no policy.

VOTE-COPE—Day

- Direct payment through ERS and TRS. Must send check if in an ORP. Members can contribute through UUP expense vouchers.

- Day presented on VOTE-COPE at all three regional retiree leadership retreats.

New Business

- Task Force on Retiree Issues is being reconstituted with a report due 2025. RMGC needs to nominate members to the committee for consideration by the UUP president, as well as offer suggested topics for consideration by the task force.

- Future meetings: Zoom meetings January/February and during summer. In-person meeting at Spring DA (April 12 and 13 in Saratoga Springs for pre-meeting and RMGC meeting).

- Pearl H. Brod Retiree Award nominations are due April 1 (the past date of April 15th was changed to reflect the 2024 Spring DA/RMGC schedule). In the future, nominations will be due 10 working days prior to the Spring DA. RMGC can give up to two awards per year.

- Each chapter should consider giving a chapter retiree award.

- Discussion of Mideast crisis.
- Opportunities in Retirement—lifelong learning (see related story on page 1). Meeting adjourned at 12:15 pm.

- Elections for secretary and vice chair were held. L. Tyler was re-elected as secretary and Lyon was elected as vice chair.
- NYSUT Retiree ED 52 meeting (follows OfR training in Albany). RMGC is entitled to nine delegates: Chair and eight regional reps. R. Tyler and two presidential appointees are alternates.

- Checks will be processed daily using the Dropbox established by Key Bank.
- Pre-retirement sessions scheduled monthly via Zoom.

Apple is moving into a new position in Benefits dealing with more active issues. He will be liaison with GOER and will be training Gretchen Sarnowicz and Dan Quackenbush to take over retirement benefits. UUP will post Apple's current position.

Finance Report—R. Tyler

- Budget will be presented at the RMGC meeting at the Fall DA.
- Funding for regional meetings for fall was approved at the April meeting.
- Moved by Schaffer and L. Tyler that retirees who attend regional NYSUT retiree meetings be reimbursed. Passed.

- Moved by Russell and Lyon that funding will be provided if RMGC chooses to send an observer above the nine seats to the NYSUT ED 52 meeting. Passed.

Old Business

- Update on chapter officers for retirees: Three campuses will appoint or hold emergency elections—Delhi, Polytechnic and Optometry. Cobleskill just appointed its OfR for the next two years.
- OfR retreats are scheduled, and jackets will be ordered.
 - Sept. 12-13 Long Island for Metropolitan NY & Long Island
 - Sept. 26-27 Albany for Capital, North Country & Southern Tier
 - Oct. 11-12 Rochester for Western NY, Central NY & Finger Lakes
- McAteer applied for $3,000 NYSUT Organizing grant.

New Business

- Future initiatives for the next three years include UUP Task Force on Retiree Issues being reconstituted with a report due in 2025. The task force will include some RMGC members.
- Recently notified that retirees can not serve on committees as chair or co-chair. This appears to be a change in policy. Retirees need to be respected for their experience and willingness to serve. McAteer will follow up.
- Discussion of third-party notification for UUP retiree dues. Apple to research if the Retiree Membership application can be modified noting this request.
- RMGC informal meeting will be held after dinner on Oct. 12 and formal meeting will be Oct. 13, time to be announced. Meeting adjourned at 3 p.m.

What your beneficiaries need to know

Don't forget to remind your beneficiaries that, upon your death, they need to inform the campus Human Resources Department and contact UUP Retiree Coordinator Gretchen Sarnowicz at (800)

342-4206. If they don't contact the campus or UUP, they won't get the survivor's benefits: that's $3,000 from the state and $1,000 from UUP. Remind them to make the calls!

How one retiree came to write fiction

by Howard R. Wolf
Buffalo

When I joined the University at Buffalo's department of English in 1967, I hoped to teach literature and to continue to be a productive creative writer.

Because I had won a Hopwood for Fiction at the University of Michigan and completed a Ph.D. thesis on the fiction of Henry James, my goals seemed possible.

The key word was "possible." Though I still saw the writer as a freelance on the frontlines of history, I was able to sustain this notion during the "anti-war movement" (1963-1975) when universities were at the center of American life.

But a silence descended upon UB in 1975 when the Viet Nam War ended. The halls of the department's offices now felt empty. No students rushed through to announce an emergency meeting.

How could I now teach literature with a sense of urgency at the end of a period of cultural crisis, and what kind of urgent creative writing might it make possible?

I tried to make up for a sense of lost material by teaching in Turkey, Malaysia and Hong Kong, in the hope that overseas countries in transition would replace domestic tranquility with international drama.

But several obligations brought me back to Buffalo, in part to raise a daughter as a single parent, which tender experience engendered: Forgive the Father: A Memoir of Changing Generations (1978).

I now paid more attention to the lives of students and colleagues as they struggled to come to terms with the demands of a postwar period; and I discovered I could write about characters among whom I was living (including myself) more meaningfully through the act of teaching drama and fiction.

If the 1960s had exposed at the macro-level the implications of universities resisting the demands of external forces (the draft, war-related research), the post-1975 period allowed one to discover at a micro-level the personal history of individuals: Tolstoy vs. Freud?

And so began a decades-long project to write short fiction that would attempt to portray in reimaged terms the "human comedy" in which I was both author character: soliloquy and drama.

Timeless advice comes to mind: "Write about what you know!" Hint for retirees: What's in your memoir?

(Emeritus professor of English at the University at Buffalo, Howard R. Wolf has twice been a Fulbright Scholar and has lectured as an Americanist, creative writer, and literary journalist in twenty countries. Widely published, he is the author of the play Home at the End of the Day [2017] and his ongoing series, The Education of Ludwig Fried. When not writing, he gardens, listens to jazz, and ruminates.)

True crime novel penned by Binghamton retiree

by Bernard Rosenthal
Binghamton

An active retiree member from the Binghamton Chapter, Bernard Rosenthal wrote Injustice in Ohio, a true-crime novel about two wrongfully convicted people, now exonerated.

1994, Lorain, Ohio.

Nancy Smith, a bus driver, is charged with taking children to a man who sexually abuses them.

But in a police lineup, the children, who knew the bus driver, were unable to identify the man who had supposedly abused them. Attendance records show that the children were in school on the days of the claimed abuse. The bus driver's log showed no diversion from her route. After reporting his findings to the Lorain County prosecutor and recommending that the investigation end, since there was no credible case, the officer was promoted to a desk job.

In a courtroom filled with false claims, Nancy Smith and a man named Joseph Allen, who had never seen the children nor the bus driver, are found guilty of jointly abusing the children. Smith is given a minimum of 30 years and a maximum of life, while Allen is given multiple life sentences.

She is white; he is Black. Both are innocent.

This book addresses the way in which false claims prevailed because, in this judicial system, process and procedure trumped truth—and political ambition trumped all of it.

Today, a new trial has been granted. Allen and Smith are both out of prison. What happens next remains to be seen.

The book was published by Local History Press, an imprint of Sunbury Press Inc., Mechanicsburg, Penn., in March 2022.

Latest Nickel Series novel to hit shelves in 2024

by SEG Publishing

Since his 2013 retirement, Buffalo Center Chapter's Gary Earl Ross has published four hard-boiled mystery novels in the Nickel City series from SEG Publishing.

In this series, African-American Iraq War vet and retired army CID detective Gideon Rimes sets up shop as a private investigator in his home town, nicknamed for the bison head five-cent piece. In Nickel City Blues, Rimes is hired to protect a blues singer stalked by her ex-boyfriend, a cop. In Crossfire, the search for a missing doctor puts him in the contested space between two criminal organizations. Published before events that got worldwide coverage, Storm Warning depicts a white supremacist attack on a diversity gathering in Buffalo. Naked

Lady involves what could be revenge porn, but is somehow linked to a classic Conn saxophone with a nude etched into its bell. The series' next book—tentatively titled Nickel City Monsters—is due out in 2024.

Book reveals new info on 19th century architect

by Fordham University Press

A new book by retired distinguished professor of fine arts at Buffalo State College Francis R. Kowsky reveals new and previously unknown biographical material about an important figure in 19th century American architecture and music.

In Hell on Color, Sweet on Song, Kowsky, a notable architectural historian, presents a study of American architect and musical genius Jacob Wrey Mould. While Mould is not a name that readily comes to mind when one thinks of New York City architecture, he was one-third of the party responsible for the early development of the city's Central Park. To this day, his sculptural reliefs, tile work, and structures in the Park enthrall visitors.

Mould introduced High Victorian architecture to NYC, his fingerprint most pronounced in his striking and colorful ornamental designs and beautiful embellishments found in the carved decorations and mosaics at the Bethesda Terrace.

Mould, whose personal history included a tie to Africa, was born in London in 1825 and trained there as an architect before moving to New York in 1852. The following year, he received the commission to design All Souls Unitarian Church. Nicknamed "the Church of the Holy Zebra," it was the first building in America to display the mix of colorful materials and medieval Italian inspiration that was characteristic of High Victorian Gothic architecture.

In addition to being an architect and designer, Mould was an accomplished musician and prolific translator of opera librettos. Yet anxiety over money and resentment over lack of appreciation of his talents soured Mould's spirit. Unsystematic, impractical, and immune from maturity, he displayed a singular indifference to the realities of architecture as a commercial enterprise.

Despite his personal shortcomings, he influenced the design of some of NYC's revered landmarks, including Sheepfold, the Metropolitan Museum of Art, the American Museum of Natural History, the City Hall Park fountain, and the Morningside Park promenade. From 1875 to 1879, he worked for Henry Meiggs, the "Yankee Pizarro," in Lima, Peru.

Resting on the foundation of Central Park docent Lucille Gordon's heroic efforts to raise from obscurity one of the geniuses of American architecture and a significant contributor to the world of music in his time, Hell on Color, Sweet on Song (Fordham University Press, 2023) sheds new light on a forgotten genius of American architecture and music.

Peace, security require stronger UN

by Larry Wittner
Albany

Addressing the United Nations Security Council on Sept. 20, 2023, Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky delivered a heartfelt plea “to update the existing security architecture in the world, in particular, to restore the real power of the UN Charter.”

This call for strengthening international security under the aegis of the UN makes sense not only for Ukraine—a country suffering from brutal military invasion, occupation, and annexation by its much larger, more powerful neighbor, the Russian Federation—but for the nations of the world.

For thousands of years, competing territories, nations, and empires have spilled rivers of blood and laid waste to much of the world through wars and plunder. Hundreds of millions of people have died, while many more have been horribly injured or forced to flee their shattered homelands in a desperate search for safety. World Wars I and II, capped off by the use of nuclear weapons to annihilate the populations of entire cities, brought massive suffering to people around the globe.

In 1945, this mad slaughter and devastation convinced far-sighted thinkers, as well as many government leaders, that human survival was dependent upon developing a framework for international security: the United Nations. The UN Charter, adopted in a conference in the spring of that year in San Francisco by 50 Allied nations, declared that a key purpose of the new organization was “to maintain international peace and security.”

The UN Charter, which constitutes international law, included provisions detailing how nations were to treat one another in the battered world emerging from the Second World War. Among its major provisions was Article 2, Section 4, which declared that “all members shall refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any state.” Furthermore, Article 51 declared that “nothing in the present Charter shall impair the inherent right of individual or collective self-defense if an armed attack occurs against a member of the United Nations.”

It makes sense to strengthen “international security under the aegis of the United Nations.”

— Lawrence Wittner
Albany Chapter

Although the UN Charter provided for a General Assembly in which all member nations were represented, action to maintain international peace and security was delegated primarily to a UN Security Council with fifteen members, five of whom (the United States, the Soviet Union, China, Britain, and France) were to be permanent members with the right to veto Security Council resolutions or action.

Not surprisingly, the right of any of these five nations to block Security Council peace efforts, a right they had insisted upon as the price of their participation in the United Nations, hamstrung the world organization from enforcing peace and international security on numerous occasions. The most recent instance has occurred in the case of the Ukraine War, a conflict in which, as Zelensky lamented, “all [Security Council] efforts are vetoed by the aggressor.” As a result, the United Nations has all too often lacked the power to enforce the principles of international law confirmed by its members and enshrined in its Charter.

Some people are perfectly content with the weakness of the United Nations. Fierce nationalists, as exemplified by Donald Trump and his Republican followers, are contemptuous of this or any international security organization, and many would prefer its abolition. Others have little use for the United Nations but, instead, place their hopes for the maintenance of international peace and stability upon public and governmental acceptance of great power spheres of influence. Meanwhile, a segment of the international Left ignores the United Nations and insists that world peace will only be secured by smashing “U.S. imperialism.”

Sadly, those forces opposing international organization and action fail to recognize that their proposals represent not only a return to thousands of years of international strife and mass slaughter among nations, but, in today’s world, an open door to a nuclear holocaust that will end virtually all life on earth.

Compared to this descent into international chaos and destruction, proposals to strengthen the United Nations are remarkably practical and potentially effective. Zelensky has suggested empowering the UN General Assembly to overcome a Security Council veto by a vote of two-thirds or more of the Assembly’s nations. In addition, he has proposed expanding the representation of nations in the Security Council, temporarily suspending membership of a Security Council member when it “resorts to aggression against another nation in violation of the UN Charter,” and creating a deterrent to international aggression by agreeing on the response to it before it occurs.

Of course, there are numerous other ways to strengthen the United Nations as a force for peace and to help ensure that

The two Claras: Pioneers of public health nursing

by Dan Marrone
Farmingdale

The American Public Health Association defines public health nursing as “the practice of promoting and protecting the health of populations using knowledge from nursing, social, and public health sciences ...

Areas of interest include, but are not limited to: Immunizations; Infection Prevention; Environmental Health; and Opioid crisis response.” Public health nurses are essential health care professionals, who work at federal, state, county and city government-funded hospitals and clinics. They toil in exhausting 10- to 12-hour shifts.

SUNY emphasizes public health care delivery and education. SUNY has four academic health sciences centers, five hospitals, four medical schools, two dental schools, the state’s only college of optometry, and 25 other state-operated campuses dedicated to health professions and services. Each year, SUNY health care facilities serve more than 1.3 million patients. During the COVID-19 pandemic, public health nurses at these SUNY facilities stalwartly aided those in dire need. The invaluable service of present-day nurses carry forward the valiant legacies established by Clara Barton and Clara Maass.

Clara Barton

Clarissa “Clara” Harlowe Barton (Dec. 25, 1821-April 12, 1912) was a pioneering American nurse that achieved heroic stature by tending the wounded on battlefields during the Civil War (1861-1865). With funding approved by President Abraham Lincoln just before his tragic assassination, Barton founded the “Office of Missing Soldiers.” Later in life, she founded the American Red Cross, a nongovernment organization that is a member of the International Red Cross.

Union Army authorities prohibited female nurses at Civil War battlefields due to the inherent risk of death. Barton circumvented this restriction by bravely aiding and carting away wounded soldiers amidst battle. Among the carnage of the Civil War, the Battle of Antietam (Maryland) was the bloodiest.

On Sept. 17, 1862, the battle between Union and Confederate forces resulted in 22,717 wounded and 3,600 killed. That day, Barton went to the frontlines and risked her life to aid wounded soldiers—many of whom would have perished without her aid.

The National Park Service states: “As bullets whizzed overhead and artillery boomed in the distance, Miss Barton cradled the heads of suffering soldiers, prepared food for them in a local farm house, and brought water to the wounded men. As she knelt down to give one man a drink, she felt her sleeve quiver.

She looked down, noticed a bullet had killed the man she was helping.” Barton bandaged the wounded soldiers and placed them on wagons that were brought to makeshift hospitals, where she assisted in amputations, dressed wounds and in many instances served as a surrogate mother/wife for delirious soldiers. Barton became a role model that spurred the recruitment of other battlefield female nurses. In this time where there were no pain-relieving medicines, her efforts and that of a growing number of other female nurses assisted thousands of wounded soldiers.

The surrender of Confederate forces at Appomattox in April 1865 brought an end in the fighting, but the abject suffering of wounded soldiers lingered long after the war. This distress was not only physical, but also social. Barton discovered that thousands of letters from distraught family relatives to the U.S. War Department were going unanswered. The government neither had the staff nor the method for locating and identifying missing soldiers. Unable and bureaucratically unwilling to deal with this monumental public health and welfare problem, the War Department just stamped “Missing” to inquiries from relatives. Shortly before the war ended, Barton met with President Lincoln to address the need for establishing a mechanism for communicating with the families of the wounded soldiers. The 16th president readily assented to her requests. Besides a modest salary, Barton received funding to set up the “Office of Missing Soldiers” at 437½ Seventh St., Northwest Washington, D.C.

After the war ended, Barton secured additional funding to oversee the identification and burial of more than 13,000 Union soldiers that died while incarcerated in Andersonville, a merciless Confederate prisoner-of-war camp in Georgia. Through her tireless efforts during and after the Civil War, Barton and others at the Office of Missing Soldiers responded to 41,855 inquiries, resulting in more than 22,000 soldiers being identified as killed in action or who later died in hospitals.

Barton then expanded her outreach efforts through the American Red Cross, which she founded. As a nongovernment, independent entity with a federal charter, “the Red Cross maintains a special relationship with the federal government with the ongoing mission of preventing and alleviating human suffering in the face of emergencies by mobilizing the power of volunteers and generosity of donors.”

For the remainder of her long life, Barton helped establish government-funded nursing schools throughout the United States. No less than four-dozen nurse-training facilities are named after her, including the Clara Barton High School for Health Professions located in Brooklyn, N.Y. More than 60 roads and villages nationwide bear her name. On Sept. 9, 1962, a stone monument at the Antietam Battlefield was dedicated to honor Barton. In 1973, she was posthumously inducted into the National Women’s Hall of Fame. In 2015, the Clara Barton’s Missing Soldiers Office Museum, run by the National Museum of Civil War Medicine, opened in the small office she originally occupied in Northwest Washington, D.C.

Clara Maass

Clara Louise Maass (June 28, 1876–August 24, 1901) gave her life in the struggle for finding a cure for Yellow Fever.

Born in East Orange, N.J., Maass enrolled, at age 16, in the Christina Trefz Training School for Nurses within Newark German Hospital. The hospital and nurse training facilities were established in 1868. Maass graduated from the nursing school in 1895 and commenced practicing at the affiliated hospital. Her stellar performance earned her a promotion to head nurse at the tender age of 21.

In February 1898, the battleship USS Maine was blown up and sank, with many lives lost off the coast of Cuba. Two months later, the U.S. Congress declared war on Spain and the Spanish-American War ensued. Maass immediately volunteered to become a U.S. Army nurse. However, she was barred from enlisting due to her gender. Maass instead was hired as a “contract nurse” by the U.S. Army. (The U.S. Army Nursing Corps was established in 1901, poignantly the same year Maass gave her life for her country. There are currently 29,645 nurses in the U.S. military, 65 percent of whom are female.)

From 1898 to mid-1900, Maass served with the Seventh and Eighth U.S. Army Corps in military bases located in Florida, Georgia and The Philippines. She developed an expertise in treating those suffering from infectious diseases, including dengue, malaria, typhoid and the No. 1 killer, Yellow Fever, also known as “Yellow Jack.” While stationed in Manila, she contracted the fever and quickly recovered. Dr. William Crawford Gorgas (1854-1920) of the U.S. Army Yellow Fever Commission was intrigued by her speedy recovery. In October 1900, he requested she go to Cuba and assist him in field tests that examined the cause and cure of Yellow Fever. Soon it was determined that human subjects were needed to investigate the potential treatment for this deadly disease. As a courageous, pioneering nurse devoted to alleviating suffering, Maass volunteered to be bitten by a mosquito known to carry Yellow Fever. In March 1901, she contracted relatively mild case of the disease and, for a second time, quickly recovered.

Due to her speedy recuperation, Maass became a prime subject to test for immunization. The hypothesis of immunization is that perhaps a mild case would immunize (prevent death) from the full-blown illness. In this way, the individual may encounter a nonlethal level of sickness, but thereafter be immune to the virus.

Since Maass had already successfully recovered from two previous bouts with Yellow Jack, she became a prime candidate to test for immunization.

With immense bravery and devotion, Maass agreed to be bitten a third time by a mosquito carrying the contagion. On Aug. 18, 1901, she once again contracted Yellow Fever. This time she fell grievously ill. She suffered painful headaches, muscle stiffness and life-threatening high fevers. Her condition worsened over six days. Knowing her end was near, Maass wrote her mother a poignant farewell letter, explaining that she was serving and sacrificing her life for humankind. Later that day, Aug. 24, she died.

News of her death caused a nation to grieve. The outrage over how and why she died spurred the U.S. government to substantially tighten the rules for testing human subjects. From this heightened scrutiny came the concept and strict laws pertaining to “Informed Consent—the detailed process in which a health care provider educates a patient about the risks, benefits and alternatives of a given procedure or intervention.”

After Maass died, massive sanitary measures were taken to mitigate the disease in occupied Cuba and later in Panama from 1903 to 1914 during the building of the canal.

Twenty-four-year-old Maass was buried in Fairmount Cemetery in Newark, near where she trained as a nurse.

On June 19, 1952, the Newark German Hospital was renamed Clara Maass Memorial Hospital. The facility has since been expanded as the Clara Maass Medical Center, a world-class medical facility specializing in the treatment of infectious diseases. The medical center has near its entrance a museum devoted to Maass and those heroic volunteers who gave their lives in the fight against Yellow Fever and other infectious diseases. Maass’s tragic, though magnificent, life story can be seen in a seven-minute video at <https://www.rwjbh.org/clara-maass-medical-center/about/history/>

In 1915, 14 years after her death, the American Nurses Association inducted Maass into its Nursing Hall of Fame. The Calendar of Saints of the Lutheran Church honors Maass every Aug. 13 for “Giving her life to help humanity.”

agricultural soils are located. ... When invoked, [94-c] denies towns and villages the land use authority granted them under enabling statutes almost 100 years old. (<https://nysba.org/preempting-local-zoning-codes-fuels-opposition-to-renewable-energy-in-new-york/>)

The picture with offshore wind is different, but not hopeful. New York has no jack ships to install offshore turbines; the Empire and Sunrise projects are years behind schedule; and as reported by Politico, contractors have reopened negotiations over pricing.

The state plan will require new dedicated transmission lines for the full nameplate capacity of solar and wind, because, occasionally, resources will generate near their full capacity rating. This year's budget will allow the state power authority to take land by eminent domain to build transmission lines.

To backup solar and wind resources, the state must retain, or build, fast-ramping dispatchable capacity equal to the capacity of the intermittent resources. Because relatively efficient combined cycle gas plants can't be "switched on" to generate full power quickly, these must be kept running in a hot stand-by mode, or inefficient single-cycle plants must be available. We could be burning nearly the same amount of gas even as wind and solar resources are deployed.

In its recent "Power Trends" report, the grid operator NYISO has said that it is obliged by federal tariffs to keep the lights on: Despite state law, it will not be able to close peaker plants; and most of the state's other fossil-fuel resources will be needed well past 2030.

Storage is its own can of worms. Fires are burning at lithium-ion facilities in New York as I write this. But New York's

"It happens that we've known how to solve (the energy) problem for half a century. Large economies ... effectively decarbonize (with) hydro or nuclear power, or both. ... NY should revisit its energy plan."

— *Dennis Higgins

plan would entail building 60 times the 1.2GWh Moss Landing, CA facility, the largest li-ion storage in the world. Storage and transmission and backup represent hundreds of billions of dollars in cost.

Reliability and cost hinge on the state tripling energy imports and exports. Someone might have looked at California. The Golden State wants to sell excess solar, but last year the state dumped 2.6 terawatt-hours, enough to run NYC for two weeks. NYISO indicates that New York's neighbors will probably not have excess energy to share. We may have no buyers for excess summer solar or energy suppliers to avoid blackouts the rest of the year. The NYISO already warns of a dangerously slim capacity margin for NYC as soon as 2025, potentially falling short over 400MW in normal summer weather. (2023 Power Trends and Short-Term As-essment of Reliability:2023 Quarter 2)

California and Germany are already engaged in this experiment. They enable us to see a couple of decades into the future. They shut down carbon-free nuclear and have 35 percent to 40 percent of their grid capacity in solar and wind. Both have electricity costs double or near double their neighbors. Both still rely on fossil fuels, including coal, to ensure reliability. When expected energy imports don't arrive in California, the lights go out.

While this would seem to be a real conundrum, it happens that we've known how to solve this problem for half a century. Large economies—Sweden and France, for example—effectively decarbonized in a matter of a decade or two. They did it with hydro or nuclear power, or both. Further, research has shown that nuclear power has the lowest lifecycle environmental impacts, uses the least land and materials of any generating source, and is as safe as solar or wind, at about the same cost. New York should revisit its energy plan.

(Dennis Higgins taught computer science and mathematics at St. Lawrence, N.Y., and Scranton, Penn., and finished that public career with 32 years at SUNY Oneonta. Along with an electrical engineer colleague, Higgins gives presentations on state energy plans and policy to physics classes, town boards, civic/environmental groups, Rotary clubs, and general audiences.)

it works as an effective international agency for battling the on-rushing climate catastrophe, combating disease pandemics, and cracking down on the exploitative practices of multinational corporations. Its member nations could also rally behind the UN Treaty on the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons (still unsigned by the nuclear powers), agree on a UN program to handle the burgeoning international refugee crisis, and provide the world organization with substantially greater financial resources to reduce global poverty and mass misery than it currently receives.

Indeed, the horrific Ukraine War is but the latest canary in the coal mine—the danger signal that people of all nations should recognize as indicating the necessity for moving beyond national isolation and beginning a new era of global responsibility, cooperation, and unity.

CONTINUING ED

The good news for retirees is the wide variety of continuing education offerings at SUNY campuses across the Empire State. Many continuing education programs at SUNY campuses were “on hold” or canceled during the COVID pandemic. Though there are and will be sporadic spikes in COVID cases due to seemingly endless coronavirus variants, pandemic risks are abating. Fortunately, quite a few of these continuing education offerings are currently available for free or at minimal cost to participants.

Further good news is that post-pandemic, SUNY campus continuing education programs have been restarted and even, in numerous instances, expanded.

Doreen Day, a Stony Brook HSC retiree, has taken advantage of post-retirement learning opportunities.

“After my retirement in 2018, I was looking for something to keep me occupied,” Day said. “As a nurse I knew the importance of being physically and mentally engaged as a retiree. The Osher Lifelong Learning Institute at Stony Brook University gave me the ability to take part in workshops to learn, keep active or just have fun.”

Farmingdale retiree Dan Marrone gave presentations on the history of New York state at the Institute for Learning in Retirement at Farmingdale State College on Sept 26 (above) and Oct. 3 (left).

Another example of continuing education at SUNY campuses are courses and lectures offered through the Institute for Learning in Retirement at Farmingdale State College. Dr. Daniel Marrone has given lectures at the ILR at various times, including recent presentations on the history of New York state.
